Occupational and physical therapists collaborate with the educational team to address student needs. They work with a variety of people such as:

- students, to improve their performance in a variety of learning environments (playgrounds, classrooms, lunch rooms, bathrooms, etc.) and optimize their performance with adaptations & accommodations;
- parents, to help them support their children’s learning and participation in school;
- educators and other school support staff, to plan and develop activities and environments that include all students;
- para-educators, to support child success and promote safety within the school environment (e.g., physical and behavioral assistance needs); and
- administrators, to provide training for students, staff, and parents, as well as to recommend equipment for schools and ways to modify existing buildings and curriculum to allow access for all.

A physical therapist addresses needs around gross motor development, such as sitting, walking, running, jumping, climbing, and adaptive equipment to enhance independence and function.
